

Conducting financial transactions is as important to human life as oxygen. It is perhaps impossible to navigate through everyday life without making a transaction, which could be as simple as buying airtime or getting a bottle of water.

With the population of Nigeria and the African continent by extension on a geometric rise and expected to double in thirty years, it becomes imperative that the financial life of the teeming society is inclusive, accessible and affordable.

This is what drives Kashbase as an encompassing financial outfit. The digital outfit aims to provide financial inclusion and increase awareness among a wide network of people across the Sub-Saharan region.

With demand for financial services at an all-time high and the cost of traditional banking services considered by many to have become overbearing with insignificant value on financial products, experts have envisaged digital banks to change the reality of banking.

Kashbase then offers significant value to the African society as it can realise up to 15% interest on money saved on the platform towards achieving financial goals, and unlike the banking norm, growing money on the platform comes at no cost.

The digital financial agency which has already processed over $500,000 in transactions also lays claim to being the pioneer saving and investment platform which empowers agency banking and mobile money through liquidity provision.

With provision of financial services which range from saving, investment, purchases, bank transfers, Kashbase is apparently doing good its promise of promoting financial ease and deepening financial access, as the company's assets are held by Security and Exchange Commission-licensed EAC Trustees.
